What I Want You to Know

Values and guidance, one page at a time

Some of what you know took a lifetime to learn, and your family would rather hear it from you than guess. Each page takes one part of life. Fill in the ones that matter to you and skip the rest. Short answers are fine. A true story beats a rule every time.

Written by: _____ For: _____

Date: _____

> A way to begin. Finish the first sentence on each card out loud before you write it. If you get stuck, think of one moment when you learned this the hard way, and start there.

The twelve cards

Money · Work · Love and marriage · Raising children · Faith and what I believe · Hard times · Family · A good life · Getting older · Forgiveness and regret · Friendship · Giving back

Then a card of your own, for a part of life that is yours alone, and a last page that sums up each card in one sentence.

Ways to use them

- One card a week. Twelve weeks, a few minutes each, and it's done.
- Answer out loud. Have a grandchild ask the questions and write down or record what you say.
- Give each child their own set, or write one set for the whole family.
- Keep them with your important papers, and tell someone where they are.
- Read them aloud at a birthday, a holiday or a family dinner, while you're there to enjoy it.

Skip any card that doesn't fit your life, and use the card of your own for anything else: a trade, a hometown, a marriage, a military service, a recipe.
